This 14,000 square foot, two-story building in Denver, Colorado houses a sophisticated tissue laboratory for the Department of Veterans Affairs. Though externally modest by design, internally, the building utilizes a number of sophisticated features including a specialized HVAC system that provides 12 air changes per hour with 100% fresh air, while maintaining an internal negative air pressure of 15%, completely washable walls and floors, steam heat and other laboratory safety measures such as eye wash and deluge showers.

An extremely tight site mandated the two-story design, with an elevator system and stair providing easy access to the second floor.
